

AROUND THE NATION

AROUND THE NATION; Stanford Loses a Round On Reagan Library

AP

Dec. 8, 1983

See the article in its original context from December 8, 1983, Section A, Page 22 Buy Reprints

New York Times subscribers* enjoy full access to TimesMachine—view over 150 years of New York Times journalism, as it originally appeared.

SUBSCRIBE

*Does not include Crossword-only or Cooking-only subscribers.

About the Archive

This is a digitized version of an article from The Times's print archive, before the start of online publication in 1996. To preserve these articles as they originally appeared, The Times does not alter, edit or update them.

Occasionally the digitization process introduces transcription errors or other problems; we are continuing to work to improve these archived versions.

Stanford University officials failed to persuade White House aides today to let Stanford govern President Reagan's proposed presidential library complex.

"We are continuing to discuss the matter," William Kimball, president of the Stanford board of trustees, said through a spokesman after a White House luncheon with Edwin Meese 3d, counselor to the President.

The issue is whether a public affairs center, part of the proposed library complex, will be governed by Stanford or by the conservative Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace, which is semiautonomous.

A version of this article appears in print on Dec. 8, 1983, Section A, Page 22 of the National edition with the headline: AROUND THE NATION; Stanford Loses a Round On Reagan Library